Visualisation: Seeing is believing

People receive more than 80% of their information through the sense of sight. We write and draw in order to visualise our thoughts and emotions, as well as to remember things. No wonder methods such as Agile, Scrum, Lean, Design thinking and Kanban are becoming ever more popular. That's because they all have one thing in common: visualisation. Visual management, such as Agile and Lean methods, helps you improve the performance of your business or team by using visual communication products. Both approaches use techniques that bring people together to fine-tune ideas or help them come up with joint solutions.

DESIGN the tool that's best for your WORKING METHOD!

Legamaster whiteboards can be custom-printed to feature the templates of new working methods such as the SCRUM board, the KANBAN board, the IMPROVEMENT board or the FISH-BONE diagram.

What's more, leading business templates such as CANVAS can be printed in accordance with the customer's unique requirements.

A workshop involves the structuring of a group meeting, be it a team meeting, management workshop or large group. This requires structure and the right tools.

Workshop structure

A business meeting can usually be divided into a "six-step workshop cycle". This produces a simple, logical sequence of actions that is easy for all participants to understand.

Moderator & Moderation trainer, author of successful books on moderation, managing partner of the consultancy and training company MODERATIO[®].

"A moderation process will invariably involve the use of Legamaster products! This is because professional performance can only be achieved with professional equipment; every professional knows this – from the tradesman to the musician, from the project leader to the moderator/facilitator!" PROJECTION

The 4 steps

The next 4 steps provide you with the most important selection criteria which will help you to choose the right projection screen, while taking your specific circumstances and needs into account.

Screen type

There are three projection screen types:

- Electrically operated projection screen
- Manually operated projection screen
- Mobile (tripod) projection screen

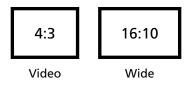

A mobile (tripod) projection screen is the best choice if a variety of locations are used for projection. However, if the projection room is permanent, then you may choose from an electrically- or manually operated screen. Depending on your personal preference and budget.

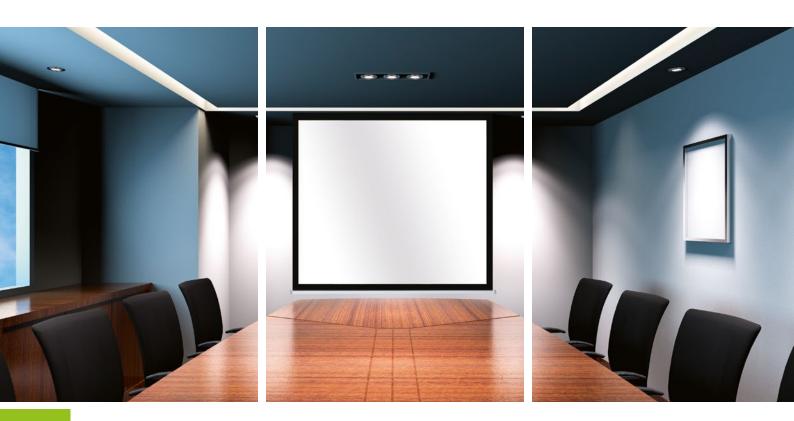

Aspect ratio

Depending on the projection method, the projected image will have a certain width / height ratio.

For the best results, we advise to select a projection screen with the same ratio as that of the projected image.

The following aspect ratios are distinguished:

Screen dimensions

The dimensions and hanging position of the projection screen can be determined by following this guideline:

Dimensions of the projection screen

Height (X) of the projection screen = 1/6 of the distance from the projection screen to the last row of chairs.

width of the projection screen =

4:3 width =1.33 x height

16:10

16:10 width = $1.60 \times height$

Optimal viewing height

The most optimum distance from the bottom of the projection screen to the floor is:

In case of:

Professional use = approximately 125 cm Home Cinema use = minimum 60-90 cm

Minimum viewing distance

The optimum perception of the projected image is determined by:

Distance to the first (D) row of audience = diagonal (D) dimension of the screen

Legamaster projection screen fabrics:

A diffusion projection screen surface spreads the light evenly and has a wide viewing angle.

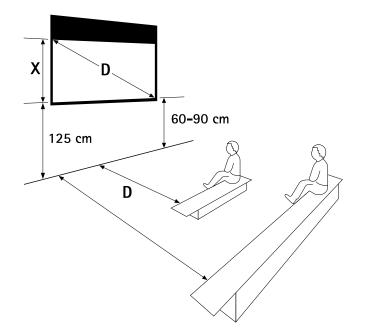

Within the diffusion screen fabrics we offer the following screen fabric types:

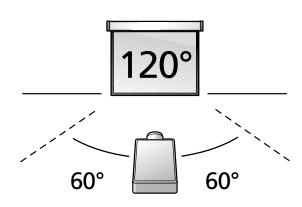

– Matte white

Suitable choice for projection settings that require a wide viewing angle or in which a projector with a high light output is used. A diffusion screen fabric can also be used in situations in which the projector is placed at seat height or where the projector is mounted on the ceiling.

Screen fabric	Gain	Viewing angle L/R
Matte white	1.0	120°

Wide viewing angle 100° Matte white
